PUBLISHER'S NOTICE

The Turkish Lexicon of Sir James Redhouse, which is now placed before the public, will speak for itself of the great acquirements and patient labors of its eminent author. A special statement on the part of the Committee of Publication is however due to the author, since the full fruit of his laborious preparation of manuscript for this Lexicon does not appear in the work as now published. A large amount of recondite and extremely interesting and valuable information concerning the History, Biography, Geography, and Religious practices of the peoples of Western Asia, was contained in the manuscript, which the Committee have been compelled to omit in publication. Limitations as to space imperatively demanded this regrettable sacrifice of material, which equals in the aggregate several hundred pages.

The Lexicon has undoubtedly suffered by reason of the impossibility of the author's presence in Constantinople during the process of publication, since not only the excision of the parts referred to, but the verification of many idioms and technical expressions have been confided necessarily to the Committee. For aid in this and other parts of its onerous undertaking the Committee is under unusual obligations to H. H. Ahmed Vefiq Pasha.

It should be noted here that the Publication Committee alone is responsible for the system of orthography of English words which is followed.

The long delay which has attended the publication of this great work has been partly due to its inherent difficulties, and partly to outside causes which could not be foreseen.

On behalf of the Publication Committee of the Mission of the American Board,

HENRY O. DWIGHT

PREFACE

In the spring of 1855, the author of the present Turkish and English Lexicon published a "Vade-mecum of Ottoman Colloquial Language", in the Preface of which he promised to prepare, "for the information of those who may wish afterwards to penetrate deeper into the arcana of this really beautiful tongue a series of more complete and scientific works". That book was written in the usual European characters only, as it was intended for the use of our army and navy, then cooperating with our ancient and most faithful ally the Sultan-Caliph of the Ottoman Empire, unjustly attacked by Russia.

In the year 1856, Mr. Quaritch, of 15, Piccadilly, London, engaged me to prepare a dictionary of the two languages, English and Ottoman Turkish, in two parts, English-Turkish and Turkish-English, the Turkish to be shown in its native characters, with a transliteration explaining the pronunciation in English letters. This work was also designed chiefly for the use of our naval, military, and civil officers in the East. It was to be prepared as quickly as possible, and to contain a vocabulary of about ten thousand words in each part. If I remember rightly, it was written and published, complete, in about four or five months time. In 1879, Dr. Charles Wells, with my ready consent, and even urging, edited a second edition of this Dictionary, with such additions to the vocabulary as he and Mr. Quaritch arrranged between them. I here bear my testimony, with great pleasure, to the correctness and rapidity with which Dr. Wells achieved his task, for which, doubtless, many will be thankful to him.

In the year 1860, or earlier, an Anglo-Turkish Committee was formed in London for the purpose of assisting the American Missionaries resident in Turkey to prepare other works that should more especially facilitate to Turks, and other subjects of the Sultan, the acquisition of our language. An English-Turkish Lexicon from my pen, as complete as it could be made, was felt by the Missionaries to be one of the chief desiderata. Funds were being looked up for the purpose, when William Wheelwright, Esq., of Newburyport, Massachusetts, United States of America, then temporarily resident in London, most generously offered to bear the whole expense of that work, up to the sum of two thousand pounds. The compilation and printing of the Lexicon occupied about eight months of the most persevering labour, and the whole edition, with the copyright aud stereotype plates, was presented by Mr. Wheelwright, as his free gift, to the American Mission at Constantinople. The English-Turkish Lexicon contains a vocabulary of about 47,000 English words explained in Turkish in all their various uses and senses, as far as possible; together with the compound terms, and the more usual phrases connected with the leading vocables. It contains also a sketch of English grammar, written in Turkish.

That Lexicon was an instalment of the author's promise, given in his Vade-mecum (of which a second edition was published in 1877 by Trübner & Co., of London), to prepare "a series of more complete and scientific works" for the public use.

But England was never aroused to take any interest in the numerous improvements that had been initiated in Turkey. In fact, all such improvements were ignored and systematically denied by public writers and speakers, in and out of parliament, in and out of office. Any call for a fellow volume to the Wheelwright Lexicon was never existent here, and nothing could be attempted in the way of publishing one. The Author had been sounding in various directions to see whether a Turkish-English Lexicon could not be launched, worthy to take place beside the Wheelwright gift; but no response was met with here. Hope had been laid aside, when a visit was made to the author, in the summer of 1878, by the Rev. Dr. E. E. Bliss, of the American Mission at Constantinople. To him was mentioned the utter want of success that had attended the proposal to publish such a work. Dr. Bliss saw the utility of the idea, mooted it to his brother Missionaries on his return home, and the result is now before the reader. To Dr. Bliss is the credit due of first welcoming the proposal; to the Committee of Publication of the American Mission at Constantinople belongs the satisfaction of having supported him, and of having trustfully undertaken to bring out the work. May it prove in their hands an instrument to effect as much good as the effort of one generation can look for. It was computed that the work would contain about 100,000 Turkish words of Turkish, Arabic, Persian, and European origin, in the Turkish character, with their pronunciation in European letters, their various significations, and as many usual compounds and phrases as could be collected. Four years sufficed for the preparation of the manuscript of about 93,000 words.

In compiling the present work. I have taken the vocabularies of Bianchi, Zenker, and Vefiq as my guides, adding many a necessary word from other sources, and occasionally consulting Golius, Meninski, Freytag, and Lane, as well as the Calcutta Arabic Qamus, the Turkish Qamus, a Persian Qamus, a manuscript Sihah, the Persian Surah, Vanqulu, the Sheref-Nama, Jihangiri, Burhan, Shu'uri, Reshidi, the Bahari-'Ajem, and the Giyasu-'l-lugat; not forgetting my own former compilation, entitled Muntakhabati-Lugati-Osmaniyya, written in 1838-41; a beautiful copy of which, in manuscript, paid for jointly by my friends Gen. Sir W. F. Williams, Bart. G. C. B. of Kars, Gen. Sir Collingwood Dickson, G. C. B., and Sir Patrick Colquhoun, Kt., Q. C., was presented in my name to H. I. M. Sultan Abdu-'l-Mejid in 1846, which was lithographed and published in Constantinople by Mr. A. Churchill, proprietor of the Jeride'i-Hawadis in 1853, and the holograph original of which was, in that year, in London, presented to H. R. H. the Late Prince Consort by his Equerry, General Sir W. Wylde, K. C. B., at the request of Sir W. F. Williams, and is preserved in the Private Library of his late Royal Highness at Buckingham Palace. This work has passed through many editions at Constantinople. It contains a selection of about 26,000 Arabic and Persian words, culled by me from Turkish authors, and many of which are not found in the lexicons. Zenker does not mention this work among his authorities. It was published anonymously at the recommendation of Ali Pasha, then Minister of Foreign affairs; and perhaps for this reason is passed over in silence. I can trace many of my additions and explanations in the excellent work of Zenker; and am quite sure that very meritorious writer would have mentioned me, had he known that this book was mine; as he frequently does, when quoting from my Quaritch volume. For this courtesy my best thanks are due to him and are here cordially offered.

The older European works above mentioned are too well known to require comment. Bianchi is almost entirely an abstract from Meninski, including even the gross blunder of the latter, by which misquoting d'Herbelot, he makes الناجی mean "a saviour", but which is avoided by Zenker. The work by this last-named author is rich in proofs of great pains-taking. He has done what I have long practised, and what has made Vefiq's work all the more copious; namely, he has extracted from the Turkish Qamus, etc., numerous Turkish words, and has explained them by means of their Arabic equivalents.

I have done my best after an absence from Turkey of more than thirty years, during the whole of which I have been engaged in lexicography, and can only hope my work will be found, taking it all in all, not unequal to its predecessors. Its chief recommendation to English-speaking students is that it is explained in English. By all who consult it, I hope it will be found useful.

THE TRANSLITERATION OF OTTOMAN WORDS.

The system of orthography used in this Lexicon in the transliteration of Ottoman words, is briefly explained as follows:

1. THE CONSONANTS

No.	Characters	Names	Equivalents
1.	ا, ء, ؤ, ئ	élif, hémzé.	'
2.	ب	bā, bé.	b
3.	پ	pé.	p
4.	ت	tā, té.	t
5.	ث	sā, sé.	s
6.	ج	jīm.	j
7.	چ	chim.	ch as in church
8.	ح	hā.	h
9.	خ	khī.	kh
10.	د	dāl.	d
11.	ذ	zāl.	z
12.	ر	ri.	r
13.	ز	zé.	z
14.	ژ	zhé	zh
15.	س	sin.	s
16.	ش	shin.	sh
17.	ص	sād.	s
18.	ض	dād.	z, rarely d
19.	ط	tā.	t, in some words of Turkish origin only d
20.	ظ	zā.	z
21.	ع	'āyn.	'
22.	غ	gāyn.	g, in some words of Turkish origin gh
23.	ف	fé	f
24.	ق	kāf	q
25.	ك	kāf	k
26.	ك	kāf i farsi	g
27.	ك	kāf.	y in Turkish words only
28.	ك	saghir nun	ñ, in Turkish words only
29.	ل	lām.	l
30.	م	mim.	m
31.	ن	nūn	n
32.	و	wāw	v, sometimes w
33.	ه	hé	h
34.	ى	yé	y

A peculiarity in the transliteration of the consonant ا in some Arabic words is as follows: An initial ا of any Arabic word (or syllable) is essentially a consonantal hemze (ء); that is, it is followed by a vowel in the same syllable. It is of two kinds, the one called the همزة القطع (the hemze of severance) and the other the همزة الوصل (the hemze of junction). These two kinds of ا differ in transliteration.

(a) همزة القطع. In Arabic words beginning with this letter which are adopted into Turkish, the consonantal nature of the hemze is ignored, and its vowel alone is considered; so that in practice, the hemze as an initial to words used in Turkish may be treated as a vowel. Thus the words أصل, إسلام, and أصول, are transliterated in this Lexicon as asl, islam, and usul; being divested of the sign which properly should represent the consonantal hemze.

(b) همزة الوصل. The name of this kind of hemze implies that the word of which it is the initial letter is joined to the one which precedes it. This junction is effected by making the last consonant of the preceding word form one syllable by means of its vowel with the consonant following the hemze of junction. This hemze is therefore elided in pronunciation. For example, in the name عبد القادر the first letter of the definite article ال is a hemze of junction. The preceding word عبد ('abd when standing alone) has to be pronounced 'abdu, 'abdi, 'abda, according to its grammatical construction, the first (nominative case) being the form commonly used by the Turks in pronouncing words of this class. Eliding in pronunciation the hemze of junction, the full name is read ʿabdu-l-qādir. The usual European orthography of such Arabic names, where the first elements are written Abdul or Abd-el, is erroneous and ungrammatical. In this Lexicon the apostrophe is used in such cases to transliterate the elided hemze of junction; as عبد الرزاق ʿabdu-r-rezzāq. نصر الدين nasru-d-dīn.

The reason for the choice of q to represent the letter ق, is the fact that q historically represents that letter. Comparing our alphabet with the Semitic alphabets of the ابجد order, they will be found to correspond in arrangement. ابجد corresponds with a, b, c, d, when it is admitted that c is abnormal, representing in fact the Semitic ج (Comp. α, β, γ, δ). Examining the two words سعفص قرشت of the ابجد formula, we see that س is rejected, ع corresponds with o, ف with p, ص rejected, ق with q, ر with r, ش with s, and ت with t. Very old Greek inscriptions contain a letter Q which is our q and the Semitic qāf. These considerations have led the best authorities to use q in transliteration of the letter ق.

In Arabic words where a reduplicated consonant is represented by a single character, with or without the teshdid sign, it is transliterated by doubling its English equivalent; since careful reduplication in the pronunciation is essential; e. g. فلاح fellāh, حس hiss. Exception to this rule is made in the case of some Arabic words naturalized in Turkish in such form that it would be mere pedantry to insist on the doubling of the letter. For example, in the numerous class of Arabic relative adjectives masculine ending in the consonant ى, this letter is really reduplicated (as رحمانى raḥmānīyy), but in Turkish is treated as though it were a long vowel. This established usage fixes the method of transliteration. Thus رحمانى is rendered raḥmānī. The reduplicated consonant reappears however, in transliterating the feminine form of this class of words. In Arabic the feminine of رحمانى is رحمانية. In Turkish the final consonant ة is softened into a vowel ه, and the word becomes رحمانيه pronounced and transliterated raḥmānīyye.

2. THE VOWELS

The Ottoman Turkish language possesses sixteen vowel sounds; eleven short, and five long. These are represented in transliteration in this Lexicon by the following signs:

a as in far	i as in bird
a as in war	ī as in machine
a as in ashore	ī as i broad, (qīrāt)
a as in pan	o as in so
ā as in far, broad, (āsmān)	u as in rule
ā as in war, broad, (nāfiz)	ü as in French tu
e as in met	u as in fur
i as in did	ū as in rude

These various sounds are expressed in Turkish writing, though in a defective manner, by the use of the Arabic vowel points and letters of prolongation, and by certain other devices, as follows:

(a) The Arabic vowels.

The Arabic language has three short and three long vowels recognized and marked. The short vowels may be indicated by three special signs; viz. 1. (◌َ) fet-hā فتحه (an opening). This sign is called اوستون üstün in Turkish. 2. (◌ِ) kesrè كسره (a breaking) called اسره ésèrè in Turkish; and 3. (◌ُ) zammā (a folding to), called اوتورو ütürü in Turkish. These signs are called حرکہ (movements) by the Arabs, but by Europeans they are commonly called vowel points.

The fetha and kesre signs have two values. With a soft consonant the fetha has the value of e̊, and with a hard consonant, that of å. With a soft consonant kesre has the value of i̊ and with a hard consonant, that of ı̊.

The zamma sign has the value of u̇.

The Arabic long vowels are represented by the letters ا, و, and ی, which, when thus used are called letters of prolongation. These letters correspond respectively with the vowel points; thus in the Arabic word باب bab, the ا is used in prolongation of the fetha of the initial consonant; in جیم jim the ی prolongs the kesre of the initial ج; and in نون nun the و prolongs the zamma of the initial ن. These three vowel letters can never be reduplicated.

These letters of prolongation were naturally received and used in Persian and Turkish when the use of the Arabic characters was adopted for those languages. In Persian the Arabic rules have been more strictly adhered to, the letters of prolongation being used to indicate long vowels only, with two exceptions:

(1) A short vowel at the beginning of a Persian word may be represented by ا, which is read å, e̊, i̊, or u̇, as the word requires. (2) The Persian pronoun تو tu and numeral دو du are written with و although the vowel is short.

In Turkish the letters of prolongation have been used with scant regard to the Arabic usage. On the adoption of the Arabic characters, the Turks already possessed books written in the Syriac character, in perpendicular columns after the Chinese fashion, and with the Syriac letters of prolongation used as short vowels. It was natural therefore that when they began to use the Arabic characters they should carry out their old system of expressing nearly every vowel, by recourse to the Arabic letters of prolongation. To this day, Turkish as written beyond the Oxus abounds in the three long vowel letters used to represent short vowels. Among the Western Turkish tribes, however, the Arabic rules had greater influence. Since it is doubtful whether a distinctly long vowel exists in any truly Turkish word, Turkish was written in Western Asia under Arabian influence without use of the letters of prolongation. The result of this was that in the old Ottoman documents, Turkish words very different in pronunciation and sense, are found written exactly alike, constituting an enormous difficulty to the reader. This difficulty was so evident that the system of Ottoman orthography was gradually changed. The "hard" and "soft" pairs of consonants were resorted to as far as possible, in order to distinguish between words of similar sound; and the Arabic letters of prolongation were used as far as it was deemed absolutely necessary, to represent Turkish short vowels. Hence in Ottoman Turkish, these letters have become mere vowels, with no idea of prolongation about them, and they are put into a word or syllable, almost at the option of the writer, merely to assist the reader.

(b) The letter (آ)

The sign medd (ˆ) was devised by the Arabian grammarians to be used over each of the letters of prolongation to show that they are not consonants, and especially to be placed over a vowel ا when followed by a consonant hemze in the same word; as in قائل qâ'il. It was next utilized to mark an ا made to do duty for a consonant hemze followed by a long vowel ا; as in the word مآل mâ'âl, for مئال. The sign was regarded by the Persians as equivalent to اا, and was adopted to distinguish their long vowel ا as an initial from the short vowel ا, without regard to Arabian rules; as in آرام etc. It thus passed into use among Ottoman writers to designate the broad sound of ا as an initial in Turkish words. In Turkish words therefore آ has the value of ȧ (ā?) ä (ä?) a̋.

(c) او and ای

Having the impression that آ is the equivalent of the combination اا, it was easy for Turkish writers to reason that the combinations او and ای could be used to express other broad vowel sounds. We find then او in use, with the values o̱, u̱, ū, ü̱, ű, and ای, with the values i̱ (ī) ï (ï).

(d) The letter ه

When an Arabic word closes a sentence or stands alone, the case endings are omitted in pronunciation. In feminine nouns so placed and ending in the consonant ة, not only the case ending that follows this final consonant, but the consonant itself is suppressed in the pronunciation. The short vowel of the consonant which precedes this final feminine ة is always fetha, and becomes in consequence of this suppression the final sound of such words. This explains how the short quasi vowel letter ه arose in Arabic at first. It was adopted by the Persians as a real final short vowel having the sound of ä or e̱. Since compound words abound in Persian, and since the first word often ends in the letter ه final, the early Turkish writers found this letter placed in the middle of Persian words, and disregarding the rule by which it is a final only, they boldly used it as a short vowel whether medial or final. It is commonly used in Turkish as the soft vowel of which ا is the hard counterpart. In some cases however, the two are equivalent and interchangeable.

In a few Persian words the final vowel ه has the value of i̱; as سه sï̱, كه kï̱, etc.

(e) The kesre of subjunction

In Persian, when a noun governs another noun, a kesre vowel is borne by the final letter in pronunciation, without being written. This kesre of subjunction indicates that the first noun governs the second, either in virtual genitive as a substantive, or in apposition with itself, as an adjective. When the governing word ends in vowel ا or و a consonant ی is added to it in order to support the kesre. When the governing word ends in vowel ه a hemze is placed after it in order to support the kesre; thus ۂ. If the governing word ends in a vowel ی it is converted in pronunciation into a consonant ی to support the kesre. This kesre of subjunction is figured in transliteration according to the rules of euphony i̱ ï or u̱; as اسب راهواری ésbi̱ rähwäri̱; خانهٔ كمان khäne̱'ï ke̱män; روی خوب rüyu̱ khüb.

3. THE LAW OF VOWEL HARMONY AND THE HARD AND SOFT CONSONANTS.

According to the law of vowel harmony, which rules all the languages of the Turkish family, if the dominant consonant be of the hard class, all the following consonants and all the vowels of the word must be either hard or neutral; and if the dominant is of the soft class, the other consonants and the vowels must be either soft or neutral. This law is also observed as far as possible in the inflection of Arabic and Persian words used in Turkish; so that when Turkish terminations are added to any such word, the consonants and vowels of the termination are dominated by the last consonant or the vowel of the last syllable of the word.

The hard consonants are the following: ح, خ, ص, ض, ط, ظ, ع, غ, ق.
The soft consonants are the following: ز, س, ك, ه.
The neutrals are ا, ب, پ, ت, ث, ج, چ, د, ذ, ر, ز, ژ, ش, ف, ل, م, ن, و, ی, ك
The hard vowels are; ä a̋ i̱ o̱ u̱
The soft vowels are; ȧ e̱ ï ü̱ ű ȧ is a neutral vowel.

ا

T. ا e̍li̍f. First letter of the Turkish alphabet. Commonly called he̍mze̍ also; though this is not really correct in any word not originally Arabic.

As an initial letter, it takes all the eleven vowel sounds, and, in Turkish, is always a vowel, as it is also in Persian. In Arabic, on the contrary, it is, as an initial, always a consonant, being the spiritus lenis of the Greek, as ع, its harsher fellow, is the spiritus asper of that tongue. For the first five vowel sounds, the initial ا requires no addition to itself, unless when, in the first two only, it is made long. In this case, the sign of prolongation, ـٓـ, named me̍dd, is sometimes figured over it, آ, in writing and in printing. More frequently, however, this sign is omitted. When the ا is to be, as an initial, pronounced with either of the two sounds of i, it is sometimes followed by a vowel letter ى, the two together making, in reality, but one letter. The two are never to be considered a diphthong, that peculiarity being unknown in Turkish. When, again, the ا, initial, is to be pronounced with any one of the four remaining vowel sounds of o or u, it is sometimes followed by a vowel letter و, these two, then, making also one vowel letter, as far as pronunciation is concerned. These two following vowels are short in Turkish words; in Arabic and Persian words they are long, being technically called letters of prolongation.

When ا is a medial letter, it always has one of the first two sounds of a, and is always long in words of Arabic or Persian origin; unless, in case of an Arabic word, it be then marked with a he̍mze̍ sign over it, أ. It is then a quiescent consonant ending a syllable; as, تأويل te̍'vi̍l. In Arabic words, as a medial, an ا may be marked by a sign of prolongation, آ. It then begins a new syllable, and is equivalent to two letters ا, one radical, the other servile; as, مآل ma̍'a̍l. In words of Turkish origin, a medial ا is not always long. In fact, it may be doubted or denied that real Turkish words, of Turkish origin, ever have a long vowel.

As a final letter, ا always has one of the first two a sounds. In words of Turkish origin, it is always, or generally short, but is always long in Persian words. In Arabic words it may, as a final, be either long or short, correctly and grammatically; but in use, it is then always taken to be long in Turkish. The difference in Arabic is very great in the two cases thus degraded into one in Turkish, as in Persian. A grammatically short final ا, in Arabic, is sometimes so written; as, ما ma̍, but sometimes it is figured as a letter ى; thus, طوبى tu̍ba̍, حسنى hu̍sna̍. Such Arabic words are, when used in Turkish or Persian, generally written طوبا, حسنا, but not always. When a grammatically long ا occurs as the last letter of an Arabic word, it is always followed, correctly, by another syllable, represented by a hèmzè sign; thus, علاء 'ŭlèmā', اربعة èrbā'à. This final hèmzè, in these cases, is always suppressed, when the words are used, in Turkish or Persian phrases, as Turkish or Persian adopted expressions. It is shown, when an Arabic quotation is introduced as a foreign sentence.

In chronograms, and in numbering the members of a series, the letter ا, whether bearing any mark or not, represents the number 1; as see, voce ابجد.

A. ا èlif, or hèmzè. These two names are given in a rather confused manner, together or separately, to several different things. They are both given to an initial consonantal ا, whether radical or servile, whether the be marked or omitted. They are both given also to the interrogative ا, which is always prefixed to the first word of the interrogative sentence; thus, أصل (in Turkish and Persian اصل) 'ăsl, أولاد 'èvlăd, أريد è tūrīd. In this position, ا, radical or servile, can take all three of the Arabic vowel sounds after it, like other consonants; for this initial ا is always a consonant, and in Arabic there are but three vowels, a, i, u. Thus, أصل 'ăsl (Turkish اصل ăsl), أفك 'ifk (T. افك ifk), أصول 'usūl (T. اصول ŭsūl). If a radical and servile ا come together grammatically at the beginning of a word, no matter which precedes the other, the two are combined, in writing, into one آ; thus, آصل 'ăsŭl, where the servile ا grammatically precedes; and, آفل 'āfīl, where the radical is the real initial. These are, respectively, for أأصل and أأفل or rather أفل.

As a medial letter, in Arabic words only, ا may either be the last letter of a preceding syllable, or the first letter of a following syllable, and is a consonant in either case Thus, تأثير tè'-thīr (T. P. tè'-sīr), where it ends the first syllable; and سأل sè-'è-lè, where it begins and ends the second syllable; and مرأس mīr-'ès, where it begins the second syllable (and really ends it also; for, grammatically, the word is mīr-'ă-sŭn in the nominative indeterminate). As a medial radical, ا may be followed (but never preceded) by a servile ا of prolongation (not ا); the two are then combined into one آ, as in the case of the initial; thus, مآل mă-'āl.

As a medial radical, ا, as any other consonant, can be reduplicated under the sign ّ, tèshdīd, thus, رأس rè-rè'-'è-sè, مرأس mŭ-rè'-'è-sŭn. It may even combine the two signs ـٔ and ـّ; thus رأس rā'-'ă-sŭn.

When radical ا, being or becoming medial, is itself movent with a u vowel, or follows another consonant movent with that vowel, it is changed, in writing, into ؤ; and if with the i vowel, into ئ, instead of ا; thus, رؤوف rā-'ŭ-fŭn (P. T. rā-'ŭf); مؤجل mŭ-'èj-jè-lŭn (P. T. mŭ-'èj-jèl); أثار 'i'-thā-rŭn (P. T. i-sār); جزئي jŭz-'iy-yŭn (P. T. jŭz-'ī).

As a terminal, radical or servile, ا or ء (without the ا) begins and ends a syllable by itself; thus, جاء jā-'ă, جزء jŭz-'ŭn, علاء 'ŭ-lè-mā-'ŭ. If such be a noun in the accusative indeterminate, an ا is added after ء, as after any other consonant, to support, as it is termed, the indeterminate accusative case-sign; thus, جزءاً jŭz-'ăn.

T. ا à, interj. 1. (placed before a noun, forms a vocative) O! Heigh! Holloa! افندم ا, O! My kind sir! اجام Heigh! My life! 2. (placed after any word, corroborates a retort, or a remark) كلدم I am come, كلدما I am come, you see, باق سن ا Look here, thou, ho! (After a vowel, this becomes يا; thus, كلدى يا he is come, you see; اتمه يا don't, don't do so, don't do that, ho!)

P. ا ā, particle (placed between two different words, or between two occurrences of the same word) combines the two words into a compound indicative of continuation or repetition; thus, سراپا from head to foot; سراسر from end to end; چاکاچاك click, clack (of the clashing of arms in combat); کوناکون colour upon colour, of various colours or sorts, various.

A. اب ēb, s. A father. ابا عن جد from father, from grandfather; i. e., ancestrally (received or descended in past time). N. B. When this word governs another noun in an Arabic phrase, and is itself in the nominative, it is written and pronounced ابو; when itself in the genitive, ابی; and when itself in the accusative, ابا; thus ابو بکر Abū-Bēkr, ابی بکر of Abū-Bēkr, ابابکر (I saw, etc.) Abū-Bēkr. Frequently, the ا is then dropped; the compounds then become: بابکر , بی بکر , بو بکر; whence بایزید for ابابزید, accus. of ابوزید the father of Yēzid, Bāyēzid.

ت

A. ت ta, vulg. te, The fourth letter of the Turkish, as of the Persian alphabet; but the third of the Arabic. It is called also, in order to certainly distinguish it from ب, ث, and ی, which it somewhat resembles, تاء مثناة فوقانیه ta'i-musnati-fevqaniyye, the superior doubly dotted t.

It is the twenty second letter in the ابجد series, with the value in chronograms, of four hundred. It is of the class of soft letters, ط being the corresponding letter of the harsh class. Its sound is that of the ordinary English t. It is often changed for a ط, through ignorance or fancy, but in Persian and Arabic words no such arbitrary change is permitted. In Arabic grammar, there are rules by which a permutative letter ت takes the place of an initial radical ا, و, or ی, in derivatives of the eighth form (افتعال ifti'al); as, اتخاذ from اخذ, اتحاد from وحد, and ایسار from یسر. In the same eighth form, when the first radical is a ت, the two letters ت, one radical and the other servile, brought together by grammar, coalesce into one in writing, under a teshdid; as, اتباع ittiba', from تبع. The participles of these words follow the same rule; whence متخذ muttakhiz, from اتخاذ, متحد muttahid, from اتحاد, etc. When the first radical is ص, ض, ط, or ظ, the servile ت of the eighth form is changed into ط; as, اصطلاح and مصطلح for اصتلاح and مصتلح, etc.; but in the case of roots beginning with ط or ظ, this radical and the permutative servile coalesce into one under a teshdid; as, اطلاع ittilâ', for اطتلاع, and اظهار izzihâr, for اظتهار. Again, when the first radical letter is د or ذ, in the eighth form the servile ت changes into د or ذ, as may be, and coalesces with the radical under a teshdid; as, ادعا and مدعى for ادتعا and مدتعي, and اذخار and مذخر for اذتخار and مذتخر. When the first radical is ز, the servile ت of the eighth form changes into د; as, ازدواج and مزدوج, for ازتواج and مزتوج.

In Arabic nouns, substantive and adjective, of certain feminine forms, the letter ت as a servile final letter indicative of the feminine gender, and sometimes, in substantives. indicative of unity, assumes the forms ة or ۀ; the former used as a separately written letter, the latter joined to the character that precedes it; as, قدرة and دولة, قدرت and دولت, etc

These Arabic words are used in Persian and Turkish as adjectives or substantives of the feminine gender. Such adjectives, in Persian and Turkish, are pronounced as in Arabic, and are written without dots to the last letter; as, مرغوبه mèrgûbè, فائقه fâ'iqâ, etc. But, with substantives, Persians and Turks do not follow the same rule in all cases, and Persians do not adopt the same rule as the Turks. The majority of such substantives, perhaps, are treated like the feminine adjectives, the final dots disappear, and the final letter becomes a virtual vowel, both in Persian and in Turkish; as, خليفه khâlîfè, شرفه shûrfè, vulg. shèrifè, مناره mènârè, vulg. minârè; etc. None of these words should be translitterated with a final h, since many Eastern words really end in aspirated h, as, صلح sulh, شره shèrèh, etc. As it is not usual to pronounce in English a final letter e in words of more than one syllable, the best substitute is, perhaps, an a. The substantives above given would then be translitterated khalifa, shurfa or sherefa, menara or minara, etc. This recommendation is not without a grave imperfection; but, owing to the defects of English orthography a better cannot be suggested.

Some of these Arabic feminine substantives, however, are not so treated. Instead of their final letter losing its dots and becoming a virtual final vowel, it is changed, among the Persians and Turks (not the Arabs) into an ordinary ت; as, قدرت qûdrèt, دولت dèvlèt, for the Arabic قدرة and دولة, etc. In this matter the Persians and Turks do not always follow the same practice; a Persian sometimes uses such a word as دوله dèvlè, vulg. Pers. dòlâ, where a Turk uses دولت dèvlèt.

In a very few Turkish words where ت is the final letter of the root or of the uninflected form, it changes into د by inflexion, when immediately followed by a vowel in pronunciation; as, درت dûrt, دردك dûrdîn, درده dûrdè; اتمك itmèk, ايدر idèr; كوتمك gyûtmèk, كودر gyûdèr. In most cases, however, it remains unchanged; as, قاتمق qâtmâq, قاتار qâtâr; even ايتمك itmèk (in another sense), ايتر itèr, etc.

In some similar cases, where the final letter is really a ت, the word is written with د, even in the nominative; thus, قورت, is often written قورد, because it becomes قوردك, قورده, etc., in its cases. And so of many others.

The letter ت of Turkish words, from want of a generally established standard of orthography, is, in other positions as well as final, at times interchanged with د, and at times with ط, according to the fancy of the writer, his locality, or his epoch. Thus we find the word تارلا târlâ, sometimes written طرلا; we see بلوت and بلوط for bûlût. These are declined بلودك, بلوده, etc.; but بلوتده, بلوتلر etc., when the ت ends a syllable. We have also the variants پاتلجان, پاطلجان, پادلجان, and تمغا varying with دامغا; etc.

The letter ت also serves to form the causative verbal root (imperative sing.) of verbs whose simple verbal root ends in a vowel (as, ارات, ارامق from ارا, etc.), of some verbs whose simple root ends in ر, ل, ق or ك (as. باغرتمق from باغرمق , باغر ; باغرمق , اقتمق from اقمق ; انجلتمك from انجلمك , انجلمك , etc.). It is also used to form the secondary causative verbal root (imperative sing.) of causative forms whose imperative ends in در (as واردرمـق , واردرتمق , etc.).

Besides the eighth form of Arabic derivatives. the letter ت , as an initial, aids in forming other derivatives not necessary to mention in this place.

In Persian a final ت sometimes indicates the singular pronoun of the second person, sometimes possessive when joined to a noun; as, كفتمت , I said unto thee, پدرت , thy father.
